

NAVAL BUNTING.

Costly Dress Suit Flag Outfit of Our Warships.

Few realize the number of flags carried by a warship nor the cost of all the gay bunting which flutters from mast to mast at any time. In addition to fleet communication, necessary during all of the maneuvers in home waters the ship must be equipped with an extensive array of flags stored on board for various forms of ceremonial and of special occasions. This "dress suit outfit of bunting" therefore consists of 250 different flags, the material and making of which cost just $4,500. Each ship is entitled to a new flag equipment every three years, though a flag ship will often require a new set of signals, owing to the constant use and handling, in about a year.

A great deal more time and labor are required to finish certain of these flags than generally supposed. For instance, the president's flag requires the longest time of any to make, as it takes one woman nearly a whole month to complete it. The life ensign, with long outstretched wings, and other emblem, are all hand sewed and involve the most patient work. The most difficult and likewise consuming the longest time to make are the foreign flags. This is especially true of the South and Central American ones. A half dozen specially skilled hand device sewers, each having acquired the knack of making certain of the center designs in these to perfection are continually kept on these respective flags. Every battleship carries forty three foreign flags, 25 feet long by 14 feet. The most expensive item to make is the General's flag, which costs $100.

large imperial eagle and royal crown, necessitating delicate slow and careful sewing, costs $40.50. The dragon flag of China consists of 200 separate pieces. Twelve to fourteen days are ordinarily consumed in finishing this flag, which costs $61.75. The flag of the United States with the huge white elephant, costs $38. The Mexican, with its center design of a large eagle holding a serpent in its bill, costs $49.50. The cheapest foreign flag made is the Moorish, which costs $21.—Arms and Navy List.

Wanted a Memento.

"Yes sir. Here cut, sir? Shall, sir?" asked the obsequious barber of the customer who entered. "Shave please," said the gentleman, exclaiming himself in the chair. "I pride myself on my quick methods," went on the assistant, lathering the customer's face and then bringing the razor into operation.

After a few lightning strokes he made a dash for two. "Sorry, sir," he said, scraping away and drawing blood here and there. Another good cut or two and the operation was nearly finished. "What anything on your face, sir?" he asked. "Well," said the customer, ruefully looking at his face in the glass, "I'd be obliged if you'd leave my nose."—London Tit-Bits.

Torres and Truthful

A despairing debt collector died the other day to corner his quarry at the bar of a prison. He told the prisoner of a number of his friends and that by this time he would be able to get them in. He would be able to get them in.

debtor on the order and said: "Pardon me, Mr. ———. When are you going to pay that small amount you owe my firm?" The debtor spun around on his heel and glared. "I'm no prophet!" he roared. The debt collector retired in a roar of laughter.—New York Times.

Did He Please Her?

The man who had had the knack of saving pennies for twenty years before.

"I'm Miss M. I don't know you," you recall me, and a coquette's dandy spinster approached him in the postoffice the day after his arrival. The ready heart warmer turned with his most beaming smile and a strong hand.

"Recall you?" he echoed reproachfully. "As if one could help it!" "Why, you are one of the kind stars of the town!"—Washington Star.

The Man's Idea

Mrs. Hiram Offen—I wouldn't be surprised if the servant girl were to let me at the key hole. Mr. Hiram Offen—Nor I. That's a woman's trick. Mrs. Hiram Offen—Oh indeed? Mr. Hiram Offen—Of course. That's why it's called "key hole drop ping."—Philadelphia Press.

The Story of a Caxton

In the Welwyn Church Register is a paper by Mr. William Ashurst of the Hull Royal Institution. "Curiosities of Book Collecting" in which he tells the story of the unearthing of a Caxton at Thame, Lancashire. The latter was entrusted with the work of writing out the superfluous books. A perfect copy of Dame John in her Booke of St. Albans (1400) was thrown carelessly aside and a little later sold to a peddler for six pence. He thought he was a lucky man when he disposed of it to a chemist in Gainsborough for a shilling. It was soon sold to a book dealer for £2, who transferred it to another in the same trade for £5. It was subsequently sold to Mr. Thomas Grenville for £50. At the time of this transaction Dublin valued this book at £10 and in 1840 a perfect copy changed hands for £650.

BONAPARTE AT JAFFA.

His Orders Regarding the Poisoning of Stricken Soldiers.

Proof or forgery of Napoleon's order in connection with the story of the poisoning of the stricken soldiers which the British well known is worth telling, as it is a story by the way.

When the French were about to evacuate Jaffa the question arose what was to be done with the plague-stricken soldiers in the hospital. Despatches were hurried before the raising of the siege—that is to say, on the 24th General Bonaparte sent for me very early in the morning to come to his tent where he was a one with the chief of the staff. After a short talk as to our sanitary condition he said to me, "If I were you I should at once the suffering of the stricken with plague and should lead the danger which they threaten by giving them opium."

"I answered simply 'My duty is to preserve life.' Then he said he developed his idea with the greatest coolness, saying that he was doing for others what in his own instances he would ask for himself."

"He pointed out to me that he was, before any one else, charged with the conservation of the army, and consequently it was his duty to prevent our abandoned soldiers from falling alive under the scimitars of the Turks. 'I do not seek,' he went on, 'to overcome your repugnance, but I believe I shall find some who will better appreciate a situation.' Despatches were sent to say that opium was a matter of fact, given to some thirty patients."

It happened, however, that a certain number rejected the vomit, were relieved, got well and told what had happened. The story has been told in various ways, and the fact of the poisoning of the sick soldiers has been accepted by the enemies of Napoleon and denied by the defenders of his memory.

HOW THEY DINED.

Methods of the English at Table in the Seventeenth Century.

The English had three meals a day, but the chief meal was the dinner, which was at 9 o'clock. The breakfast was at 10 o'clock, and the supper at 11 o'clock. The dinner was a very formal affair, and the table was set with a great many dishes. The food was served on silver plates, and the guests were expected to eat with their hands. The dinner was a very important part of the day, and it was a time when the guests would talk and discuss the day's events. The dinner was a very formal affair, and the table was set with a great many dishes. The food was served on silver plates, and the guests were expected to eat with their hands. The dinner was a very important part of the day, and it was a time when the guests would talk and discuss the day's events.

Curving was then a fine art. Each man brought his own knife and spoon for the small fork was not introduced into England until Thomas Corbitt of Oxford published his "Cruet" in 1611. Pops took his spoon and fork with him to the lord mayor's feast in 1613. The absence of forks led to the habit of using the hand upon the act of eating, the hands both before and after the meal, and to the rule that the left hand alone should be used in the common dish, the right hand being occupied with the knife.

The perfect dinner at the best time of English cookery consisted of three courses, each complete in itself and terminated by a sabbety or desert. The whole being rounded off with hippocras after which the guests retired to another room, where parties, sweetmeats and fruit were served with the choicer wines. The English were essentially meat eaters, and it was not until the time of the Commonwealth that pudding attained its extraordinary popularity. Indeed the first mention of pudding in the menus of the household at St. Bartholomew's hospital did not occur until 1710, and in 1730 a item of 5 shillings for pudding.—London Times.

Amateur Doctors

There was an ominous stillness in the house as the great physician entered and made his way to his patient's room. Hastily he made his examination, his eyes showing the deep sympathy he felt.

"Madam," he said, "I am indeed sorry to see you in such a condition as this. What has happened? Have you been run over by a motor car?" With infinite difficulty and obvious pain the patient roused herself, and the white lips slowly moved.

"No doctor," she moaned, "but I fainted in church and was brought to my friends who have been taking me to the injured."

THE LIQUOR SHE PREFERRED.

On their arrival in New Zealand a party of English people drank the health of the vessel which had brought them safely to their destination. One of the gentlemen who was asked to join in the ceremony replied:

"No, I am a teetotaler, but I'll willingly drink success to the ship in the liquor she floats in."

A friend disappeared and returned with a glass of water.

After a complimentary spontaneous to the ship the recipient tossed the water off at once, but immediately spluttered:

"Oh—oh—oh—this is—oh—what—what on earth is this?"

"That?" said his friend. "Why, you've drunk success to our noble ship in the identical liquor she floats in."—London Tit-Bits.

No Success

A clergyman who has a small farm was walking round superintending when he came up to his plowman, who was resting his horses. The clergyman said:

"John, could you not bring an old sickle and cut away the weeds in this corner while you rest the horses?"

John said: "Master, couldn't you take a bag of them mixed seeds into the poolpit with you and sort 'em while they're sowing?"

John always breathed his horses as well as himself after that with nothing said.—London Answers.

A Homemade Curfew.

Every family should have a curfew which should positively "ring tonight" and every night if needed. These curfews are inexpensive and can be homemade. Take a piece of string two feet long and whistle one end down to a handle. Then take the child that needs the curfew and bend him over a barrel. Now take the piece of string in the hand and use it for a clapper. Put it on hot. Divide the strokes evenly and see that none miss. Good for a boy or girl up to the age of sixteen, and applications are warranted to cure the most pronounced case of street loafing that exists. The music this curfew makes is finer than singing "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?"—Popular Mechanics.

An Optimistic Outlook.

It has been the cry of the irresponsible man since criticism began that his own generation produced nothing. It's a cry that I hate and deny. When the dross has been cleared away and comparison becomes possible I am convinced it will be admitted that in the aggregate, in philosophy and significant literature, in architecture, painting and scientific research, in engineering and industrial invention, in statecraft, humanity and valiant deeds, the last thirty years of man's endeavors will bear comparison with any other period of thirty years whatever in his history.—H. The Dent Judge.

The trust and dependence which characterized the Rev. Mr. Brown's attitude toward his wife's judgment in all practical affairs were some times touching, but occasionally they were amusing.

"I'm sorry you've been troubled with the toothache," said the family dentist when Mr. Brown appeared in his office one day. "I gave you the first minute I had free after receiving your wife's telephone message. Let's see—which tooth is it that's troubling you?"

"It's—it's not aching just at present," said Mr. Brown after a moment's hesitation, during which he made a cautious investigation with his tongue. "Didn't Mrs. Brown mention to you which tooth it was? I always rely on her in such matters."—Youth's Companion.

Porcelain.

China (porcelain) is so called because it was first brought from the Celestial Kingdom. It is made principally of kaolin, and kaolin takes its name from a high hill in China, where it was first discovered. It is a fine clay, white when pure, and it is easily worked. It has been found in various places, the United States as well as other countries.

Test.

It is told of the youth of a young German prince many years ago that upon one occasion, his tutor having been changed, the newcomer in examining the young prince asked:

"Can your highness tell me how much is nine times twelve?"

"Seventy-two," replied the prince, with royal promptness.

The tutor smiled, but soon recovered his equanimity.

"Permit me to state to your highness that your highness' former tutor, whom I have had the honor to succeed as an instructor to your royal highness, appears to have been a person of rather limited capabilities," he said. —Harper's Weekly.

"Antique of a regular Shindy."
The antipathy of many smaller towns is well known. It is known that many people are not aware that what the folks of this town in Shindy, are not aware still will be prepared to hear that the phrase "a regular shindy" is found in an old book in a to a poem called "The English King" published in 1570. A writer quotes the line which refers to the celebration of Maundy Thursday. "Midnight service and the lights in the night are put out, and a regular shindy follows, men being beaten and wounded." London Globe

A compromise

Four year old Gordon was the devoted owner of a cloth doll called Maudie, from which he could not be parted even after it became so dilapidated that the other members of the family would have dispensed with its company without a murmur. One morning he started on a walk with his grandmother, and as usual Maudie was hugged close to his arms.

"Oh, Gordon," exclaimed his companion, "do throw that dreadful looking doll away, and grandmother will buy you a new one."

An agonized expression spread over the little fellow's countenance. "Oh, grandmother," he replied sadly, "I couldn't throw Maudie away, but I'll try to lose her."—Lippincott's

Where He Fell

Down the postoffice steps the Rev. Dr. Lythly carefully picked his way, and then he fell suddenly shot out, and he went down right in the midst of a group of stock brokers.

"Ah," said morning Victor, "laugh like to never recognize the man. You remind us of the wicked man whose foot slipped."

"Nay," retorted the good minister, "rather do I see in him the man who went down to Jericho."

"How is that," chorused the brokers.

"Because he fell among thieves, murmured the doctor as he got up and moved decorously away.

Not to Be Trifled With.

"Of course," he said in an off hand way, "it goes without saying that a beautiful girl like you must have had many offers of marriage."

She blushed prettily, and her eyes seemed to say "Of course," but she did not answer otherwise.

"And, of course," he went on, "I would not think of asking who any of the men were or anything about them, but I am interested in knowing how they do it."

Then she roused herself.

"See here," she said, "are you trying to get pointers for a proposal to me or to some other girl?"

Thus it was that she pinned him down, as it were, and brought him to the point.

"Chouse" Seymour

There was an Irish actor named Seymour who had the nickname "Chouse," which came from his unlucky ship in the passage in "Othello." When I love thee not chouse is come again." It was in Cork that he made the break, and Cork did not forget. When he returned a year later the city was placarded by an artist in chalk, "Chouse has come again." He played Othello, and the gallery observed, "Deuced good, Chouse!" The dying Moor sat up, shook his fist in the direction of the observer and invited him to be woe a man to come down and have his head punched.

She Cheated

Said an indignant mother to her little son, "Why did you strike little Elsie, you naughty boy?"

Dick (indignant in his turn)—What did she want to cheat for, then?

"How did she cheat?" asked mamma more mildly.

"Why," explained Dick, "we were playing at Adam and Eve, and she had the apple to tempt me with, and she never tempted me, but went and ate it up herself."
